Here is a story that has an unhappy ending, but it is funny for all that: Fanny Rice, when she was at the Casino in "Nadly," was the recipient of an enormous bunch of violets, night after night. She professed not to know from whom they came. The chorus girls grew very curious, and discussed the matter on all occasions. A few days before Miss Rice left the Casino, a measurer made his way through the stage door and approached her while she was taking to a number of people. In loud tones he announced to her that he was early sorry, but that he couldn't buy any more of those violets anywhere. Miss Rice, of course, assured him that he was addressing the wrong person, but the mischief was done, and ever afterwards the chorus stris insisted that the fair Fanny had thrown bouquets at herself.
